Chalybeate Spring Water BOTTLED FROM THE SPRING, AT KATAHDIN IRON WORKS, ME. This water holds in solution a large proportion of IRON, with SULPHUR and a trace of ARSENIC, and, from its combination, is one of the best means of restoring an impoverished blood to a healthy state. It is peculiarly adapted to relieve debilitated conditions of the urinary organs, and in many cases has completely cured persons who have tried many other medicines without any relief. It can be taken at any hour of the day—but after meals is preferable—in quantities from one half pint to two pints per day. It blackens the stools and produces other changes that occur in taking iron in any form. J. A. WALLIS, Proprietor, Exchange Block, Bangor, Me. nov9 3m

"A deep and easy way to rid a house of small red ants is to place cracked hickory nuts, or shell-barks in plates. As fast as the ants are collected in large numbers, throw the nuts and the little pests into the fire or boiling water.

Mrs. Agassiz says that in certain Amazonian tribes, on the day of his marriage, while the wedding festivities are going on, the bridegroom's hands are tied up in a paper bag filled with fire-ants. If he bears this torture smilingly and unmoved, he is considered fit for matrimony.

At a dinner party, about the time Louis Napoleon set out on his trip to Berlin, a guest remarked: "The Emperor goes on a little excursion for his health." "Yes," returned the host, the Hon. Wm. M. Evarts, "but I fear he will find it a little too tonic" (Teutonic).

An ambitious amateur once put up the play of the "Lady of Lyons" as a complimentary testimonial to himself. MARTHA AND MARY. Command us to our good brethren of the clergy for annecdotes of pith and delicacy. At the house of the late Dr. Archer, in London, there was a gathering of friends, and among them Dr. Harris, author of "Mammon" and Dr. Phillip, of Maberly Chapel, author of "The Marthas," "The Marys," etc. In the course of conversation the question was mooted, which was the most amiable of the two sisters of Bethany, Mary or Martha? Dr. Archer replied: "I prefer Martha for the unselfishness of her character, in being more ready to provide for the comfort of her Lord than gratify herself." "Pray," rejoined Dr. Harris, addressing Dr. Phillip "what is your view? Which of the two do you think would have made the best wife?" "Well, really," replied the good man, "I am at a loss; though I dare say, were I making the choice for myself, I should prefer Mary." Dr. Archer, turning to Dr. Harris, said smartly, "Pray, Dr. Harris, which of the two should you prefer?" The author of "Mammon" was only for a moment disconcerted, and replied in a style that set the table in a roar: "Oh, I think I should choose Martha before dinner, and Mary after it."—[Harper's Magazine for December.

A writer in the Boston Transcript makes a vigorous defence of "Mother-in-law," who, it is insisted, deserve something better than the sneers to which they are exposed. "The truth is," says the writer, "that if a woman is ugly and mean by nature, it don't make a bit of difference whether she is a beauty of twenty, an old maid of forty, or a mother-in-law of half a dozen men; she will be mean and ugly still. And if a woman is kind and helpful and tender she will be so as a belle, or an old maid, or a mother-in-law. Every time such a sneer is uttered it wounds the feelings of great numbers of worthy women, who feel that they share the reproach of bad qualities of which they are incapable. It is an unworthy thing for a man to harbor such prejudices, and an unjust thing for him to utter or propagate. There is both good sense and delicacy of sentiment in this extract."

NEW MAGAZINES.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE for December has for its leading article a graphic and amusing description of "The Street Venders of New York," illustrated. "Jail Birds and their Flights"; "The Hoosac Tunnel"; Chapters IV, V, VI of Mrs. Davis' story of "Natasqua"; a fine poem, "The Abbot Paphnutius"; "A Thanksgiving Love-Story"; "Wilfrid Cumbermede," an autobiographical story by George McDonald, with other articles of high excellence. Published by Scribner & Co., New York.

The December LIPPINCOTT has a curious paper entitled "A Roving Commission," containing the strange experiences of a Northern newspaper correspondent who accompanied the Southern armies during the entire war, under the protection of some of the most distinguished Confederate officers. His revelations while claiming to be strictly true, will be entirely new to the public. The stories in this number are of a high order, and the literary and social gossip, spicy and entertaining as usual. Published by J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia.

GOOD HEALTH for December is full of interesting and instructive reading upon a subject that concerns us all,—the promotion of health and the lengthening of human life. The various hints and suggestions from the pens of some of the most eminent medical men in the country, are too important to be carelessly overlooked. Published by Alexander Moore, Boston.

WHISKEY AND NEWSPAPERS.—A glass of whiskey is manufactured from a dozen grains of corn, the value of which is too small to be estimated. A glass of this mixture sells for a dime, and if of a good brand is considered well worth the money. It is drank in a minute or two. It fires the brain, sharpens the appetite, deranges and weakens the physical system. On the same sideboard on which the deleterious beverage is served lies a newspaper. It is covered with half a million types; it brings intelligence from the four quarters of the globe. The newspaper costs less than a glass of grog, the juice of a few grains of corn, but it is no less true there is a large number of people who think corn-juice cheap and newspapers dear.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 30, 1870.

THE EUROPEAN KALEIDOSCOPE

The mind of the patient reader of the cable news from Europe becomes gradually bewildered in the maze of contradictory and confusing telegrams, until the "situation" appears like a vast series of dissolving views, in which armies and diplomats, cities, kingdoms and fleets, are mingling in a chaotic dance. Our sources of information seem latterly to have shared in the demoralization of the French army, until one would imagine that the cable batteries were charged at one pole with nightmare and the other with delirium tremens, or that the Continental lines had tapped antiquity and the ghosts of Babel were taking turns at the wire.

The signal victory of one dispatch fades into a defeat in the second, and the total rout of an army, depicted in startling terms in a special from Tours, is transformed into a masterly strategic movement by the correspondent at Versailles. In one telegram we learn that De Palladines has destroyed the plans of Von Moltke and is sweeping along to the rescue of Paris with resistless force, and in another, that the crafty German is about to crush the new French leader by an overpowering onset. We hear of heavy engagements along the Loire and in the reports transmitted, victory flits from one side to the other, as the hostile standards rise and fall with each electric beat. The announcement that starving Paris was appeasing its hunger with rations of tiger and hippopotamus, has been followed by assertions that the city was still amply provided, and later complaints of dining on rats and Guinea pigs with nothing but monkeys for a reserve supply, have been in turn succeeded by positive assurances that there is food in plenty for months to come and that the besieged capital is not actually overflowing with milk and honey, the lack is fully compensated from a French point of view, by an unlimited supply of wine and brandy.

The Russian question has been the subject of equally puzzling metamorphoses. Gortchakoff's moods have changed with every hour and pacific and belligerent predictions have jostled each other on the way. We finish perusing a bulletin which pictures the British Lion with bristling mane and lashing the air with his furious tail, and the next view shows him cowering with his caudal extremity curled modestly under his haunches. In the morning we are told that Russia has massed immense armies on her frontier, and the evening brings tidings that the Czar has no armies in a condition to commence hostilities. The Sultan is now eager for war and now anxious for peace. Prussia is said to have tolerated mediation and then imperatively ordered others to interfere, the Russian demands are withdrawn, sustained, modified and insisted upon, until the whole matter is so provokingly muddled that one longs to invoke parliamentary law and demand the "previous question."

It is an indispensable requirement for a modern "special" that he should be Argus-eyed and ubiquitous. Neither the fortifications of Paris nor the body guards of kings can arrest his progress in pursuit of knowledge and so long as each separate statement is positive, it does not matter how completely it is contradicted by the next. The public must have news, and if there is none, he must invent it, or when imagination languishes, employ the interval in denying what he has previously asserted. The latest sensation from Paris is the announcement that General Trochu has gone raving crazy, and this is outdone by the dispatch from Versailles which tells us how the great Bismarck fell on the neck of an American correspondent and sobbed into his sympathetic ear the story of his heartless desertion by Von Moltke and King William.

Thus far every notable lie has been interviewed, and nearly every one of them have been made to utter absurdities, but no attempt has yet been made, we believe, to imitate the royal dispatches from the Prussian headquarters and the regular confirmation of telegrams to Queen Augusta have inspired such confidence in their substantial correctness that the only specials which are accepted without hesitation are those sending with the Doveboy, signed "William Rex."

THE PISCATAQUIS RAILROAD CLAIM—The Augusta correspondent of the Boston Journal writes as follows in a recent letter,

The Bangor and Piscataquis Railroad Company make their demand of the European and North American Railway Company for their proportional share of the interest money accruing from the Massachusetts and Maine war claims of 1812, and which matter is to be heard for arbitration by the Governor and Council, Dec. 7, on the ground, it was understand correctly, that they are entitled to the benefit of the act passed in 1864, which provides that "all benefits of this act shall be forfeited by said European and North American Railway Company, upon the appropriation and use of the proceeds of timber or lands hereby granted to any other purpose than the construction of the main line of said railway or branches into Aroostook and Piscataquis counties."

The total amount of interest money is $678,000 of which $462 000 is the Massachusetts claim, which has already been paid, and the balance of $220,000 is Maine's share which is now in dispute. It is highly probable that the Governor and Council will refer the whole matter to the Legislature for settlement.

The Washington correspondent of the N Y Evening Post states that in view of a probable meeting of an European Congress the Russian government, a short time ago, expressed a desire through its minister here to have the United States government represented in that diplomatic assembly. There is no doubt that should an European Congress assemble, the Administration will decline to send representatives, in order to avoid placing itself and the United States government in a position so contrary to well-established precedents of American policy. Of this fact the Russian minister has been made aware, and Russia will not, therefore, be asked to join the United States.

It is instructive, says the Tribune, to read the proceedings of these Republican newspapers who fell into illicit relations with the enemy during the excitement of the Autumn canvass. They are rubbing their eyes open, after their temporary aberration, and looking with the soberness of satiety upon the partners of their last night's follies. The Chicago Tribune talks about "us Republicans." The Evening Post says that the Democratic party has in it no elements of reform; that the party that saved the Union must continue to administer the Government. These are judicious words—repentance is better than soda water after a night of skylarking. We only hope the amendment may survive the headache.

The result of the recent Government survey between Nevada and Utah, locates several important mining districts, heretofore considered in Nevada, in Utah. Some of these districts gave Democratic majorities at the late election, and the discovery will probably cause the return of Fitch to Congress, though the Democrats will elect most of their ticket.

Raphael Semmes of "Alabama" notoriety, has declined the nomination for Mayor of Mobile, as "in the present demoralized condition of the Federal Judiciary," his eligibility might be questioned.

THE LORD'S PRAYER. The New Testament Revolutionists now in session in London have voted that the literal translation of the phrase "deliver us from evil" should be "deliver us from the evil one." They have also decided to expunge the doxology at the end of the prayer, said to be not found in the earlier manuscripts.

With becoming deference to the "Christian clergyman and orthodox Biblical scholars" who compose this authoritative body, says the Providence Journal, we must enter a solemn protest against any change in the dear and familiar words of the prayer, whose simple and comprehensive petitions are interwoven with the earliest and most sacred recollections of childhood. Change everything else Amend, improve, add, and subtract in all other forms, but leave unmutilated the sacred and simple words of "Our Father who art in Heaven," whose cherished phraseology, coming down from the ages of the past, is associated with all that is purest and best in our lives. King James' translation of the prayer of our Lord is good enough for us.

THE DARIEN EXPEDITION. The U S ship Guard, Commander E P Lull, will leave on the Darien expedition about the fifth of next month. Commander Selridge, who has command of the expedition, will take passage in the Guard, and proceed at once to the mouth of the Atrato River, where the work is to be begun. After organizing various parties, which are to perform hydrographic and shore duty, Commander Selridge will take the Nipsic, Lieutenant-Commander Wilson, due at the Atrato the middle of January, and proceed to Aspinwall and Panama. At the latter port she will find the steamer Saginaw, which has been detailed by the Department for the purpose of carrying on surveys from the Pacific side at the entrance of the Darien River. The principal work of Commander Selridge's expedition, is to be prosecuted on the Pacific side. The party which is to take passage in the Guard, is rapidly assembling. Most of the civilians have put in their appearance, and have placed their baggage aboard. The photographer of the expedition has already fixed up his dark room and stored his chemicals. The civilian scientific staff is to be strong on the present expedition. It will be composed of an astronomer, naturalist, photographer and a civil engineer from the Pacific Coast Survey. A portion of these gentlemen will go on the Pacific side later in the season.

GOLD DISCOVERIES IN NEW MEXICO—A correspondent of the Santa Fe, New Mexican, writing from Chihuahua, Mexico, says that the people of that State are excited over the new discovery of placer gold, about 70 miles from Chihuahua. Don Pedro Gonzales, the discoverer, with three other men washed out 23 ounces of gold in nine hours. The particles found are round and plump, varying from the size of a grain of wheat to that of a huge nut. One nugget weighed an ounce. The place is situated in a deep arroyo, two or three thousand yards long, and is supplied with water from springs in all parts of the arroyo. The district yields from one to three dollars to the pan.

NAVAL. The corvette Juniata, eight guns, Commander Stephen B Luce, was at last accounts stationed in the port of Havre, France, looking out for American interests in that city, until the arrival of her relief, the Shenandoah, from Lisbon, when she would proceed to the Mediterranean for the winter. The corvette Plymouth was last at Southampton from a cruise in the Baltic. The Plymouth and Shenandoah are to remain in the North of Europe during the winter, while the balance of the European Squadron will cruise in the Mediterranean and on the Southern coast of the Continent.

The Revenue Reform dinner on Monday evening at Delmonico's, was largely attended. Robert B Minturn presided. Among the speakers were William C Bryant on the "Cause of Free trade", David A Wells, against "Monopoly", Horace White of Chicago, on a "Free trade Press", Wm Grosvenor of the St. Louis Democrat, on the "Victorious Free traders of Missouri", and by Edward Atkinson and others on the general principle. Reformers Letters were read from Senator Hoffman, Mayor Hall, General Cochrane, Charles Francis and John Quincy Adams, President Woolsey of Yale College, and others.

The companies affected by the recent Secretary Boutwell owe the Government the following amounts: Union Pacific railroad, $2,238,220, Kansas Pacific $488 169, Central Pacific Railroad $129. The amount due from the other railroads is comparatively small.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Thomas has been appointed to the New Commissionership, vacated by M Sheriff elect.

It is said that a new Republican paper is to be started in North Anson on the first of Wm Atkinson, Esq.

Secretary has returned from Georgia. He expresses satisfaction at the condition of things in Georgia, and is confident that the Republicans will, and possibly five Congressmen in that State.

—A the latest returns, the Missouri is composed of 56 Republicans 94 Democrats.

The Tribune states that Wells and Democrat Representatives to Congress 1st and 9th Missouri districts, are in portions of their districts by their election to that fact.—It is well known that in the Missouri did any candidate for Congress may be his opinion on the question as an open and avowed free trader.

It is that the proposition to strike the word out of the constitution of Michigan was defeated by a small majority.

George Curtis, in his lecture in Boston Monday evening, was warmly applauded. It said that it would be better, in the of the Alabama claims, to adopt a fraternal spirit manifested by Thomas than to follow the suggestions of Sumner.

Senor Arabassadon at the Hague from Sweden and Norway, will come to Washington in the same capacity.

Rev Trainer, of the Church of the Pilgrims, Mott street, New York, died Tuesday morning.

Senor Roberts, the Spanish Minister, was married to Miss Terry, a Cuban lady residing with her uncle in New York, at St. Stephen's Catholic Church, Monday evening.

Secretary Boutwell delivered the opening address at the great Charity Fair in, Washington on Monday night.

The President's message will probably not be printed in advance of its delivery, to guard against its unauthorized and premature publication.

A crowd of 200 Eighth Ward, New York, roughs made an ineffectual attempt on Monday night to prevent the arrest of two of their number for smashing windows. Two policemen were struck with brickbats and one of the roughs, Timothy Conroy, had his skull split open, and his arm fractured by a blow from an officer's club.

An extra train of 10 cars from Plymouth, N. H., with a large party of excursionists arrived at Lancaster yesterday noon to attend the opening of the railroad to that place.

By the provisions of the new North German constitution, Prussia has only 17 out of 43 votes to be cast by the Confederation. From this fact it is generally inferred that the future policy of Germany will be peace.

THE GERMAN LOAN.

A Committee of English bankers held a meeting last night, and resolved to offer to the German empire now loan of 300,000,000 of thalers, and authorized by the Northfederal Parliament. A dispatch is received here from Berlin, announcing that Prince Wittgenstein the Russian military agent in Paris, has been ordered by Tischin to leave the city. Prince Wittgenstein will betray its desperate condition.

TO THE EASTERN QUESTION.

The feeling to-day in many circles is pacific. The Times this morning in an article on the question says: "Desiring peace, we stand by the maintenance of peace guarantees and the repudiation altogether of the claim to suspend the obligations of the treaty of 1856, violation of which we cannot acquiesce in." The Times gives conspicuous place to a number of contributions insisting on the neutrality of the Black Sea or a declaration of war.

KING WILLIAM'S DISPATCH—THE CONVENT BATTLED NEAR AMIENS.

King William has forwarded the following dispatch to Queen Augusta:—

Versailles, Nov. 29. Yesterday, General Manteuffel, with a portion of the first army, defeated the French a few miles south of Amiens. The French lost 1000 in killed and wounded and 400 prisoners. The Prussian loss was comparatively unimportant. The Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin is near Le Mans, where Keratry has a French force of 25,000 men."

THE BRITISH CABINET—GRANVILLE AND THE QUEEN.

Special to Evening Telegram.

London, Nov. 29. Enough has transpired respecting the Cabinet difficulty, to prove that Granville is the cause of all the difficulty. He and a small section of influential colleagues have demanded with old English hauteur, a total deal of Gortschakoff's note beforehand in the negotiations are entered upon. The Queen, with Gladstone, Bright and others of the Ministry, are for a more moderate policy, and would make the demands of Russia the basis of discussion. This, Granville regards as humiliation and it is said he will be before the council that meets to-day to tender his resignation. It is certain that the Queen will accept it, for she is treading on the boundary line of despotism to prevent war. The public opinion is so much in favor of peace, that this has made the Queen popular.

WITHDRAWAL OF RUSSIA'S DEMAND.

London, Nov. 29. It is officially stated in the telegraph this morning, that Russia has decided to withdraw her demand and submit her proposition to the decision of the Conference.

A GREAT BATTLE IN FRANCE IMMINENT.

Private French advices say that a great conflict between the opposing forces, to the number of 200,000 men, is likely to occur immediately in the Southern Department. The Prussians are within twelve miles of the French Provisional Government.

TROOP DENIES

the report that he intends to banish 10,000 Parisians because of scarcity of provisions.

PRUSSIANS IN THE VALLEY OF THE EURE IN FORCE.

London, Nov. 29—8 P. M. The following dispatch has just been received here from Evreux, the Capitol of the Department of Eure, dated yesterday. The Prussians now occupy this town and are in the valley of the Eure in great force this evening. They were driven towards the village of Villers by the Gardes Mobile, who retreated in turn, when reinforcements came up for the enemy. Seven thousand Prussians now occupy Amiens. There was some sharp fighting yesterday in front of the army of the Loire, all along the country between Pithiviers and Montargis. French is sure, waiting, but it is said that the French were generally successful, having captured many prisoners and one cannon.

ALSACE AND LORRAINE.

Special to N. Y. World—

Berlin, 29. A general Congress of manufacturers will meet at Mayfirth on December 5th, to consider what alterations on the tariff and other political and commercial stipulations may be rendered necessary by the reunion of Alsace and Lorraine to Germany.

Bail of 100,000 thalers, offered for the release of the banker Gutbrach by his family, has been refused.

ANOTHER INTERVIEW WITH BISMARCK—THE SURRENDER OF PARIS WILL NOT BE ACCEPTED.

The World's correspondent at Versailles, on the 25th, says that he interviewed Bismarck for two hours yesterday. Bismarck said that the unconditional surrender of Paris would not be accepted. The capitulation of the city would only be permitted when the conditions for a complete cessation of hostilities had been agreed to. Thus many those who threaten that the war will not end with the fall of Paris, be circumvented.

The Provisional government must bear the odium of making peace. Hunger and rebellion will rapidly constrain them to complete submission. With the dismantling of Paris, to arm which so many strong places we inade defenceless, France will be so completely impotent as to be innocuous for a decade, even should she turn to refitting her arsenals and to replacing her artillery. Her energies should be devoted to the re-establishment of her prosperity, and the resuscitation of her impoverished peasantry.

London, 29. Jurasz has been appointed to the command of the army lately under Kerratry.

Special to N. Y. World.

London, 29. A special dispatch from Tours to day, says that yesterday the right wing of the army of the Loire, having repulsed during the previous day, several attempts of the enemy to turn its flank, advanced to Glon and Mantarges, and thence commenced a movement towards Pithiviers, in combination with an advance of the night centre of the army at Artony, to the same point. While these movements were being made, detachments of the enemy were in every case driven toward Beaune, mid-way between Montargis and Pithiviers, here at 2 o'clock P. M. the enemy passed with 4,000 men, consisting of the 10th Corp, and the 5th and 1st Divisions.

The French assailed the Prussians from the south, capturing two guns. At night fall the Germans seemed to be retreating further north. The German losses during the 27th, and 28th, were very heavy.

A DISPATCH FROM ODO RUSSELL.

At the Cabinet council yesterday, a dispatch was from Odo Russell, containing Bismarck's proposal for a conference to be held at London, to settle the question of Russia's claims; also a note from Count Bernstorff to Granville, stating that Prussia recommended Russia to withdraw Gortschakoff's note, on conditions that a conference be held.

Gortschakoff's second note was read at third time. The Cabinet agreed to Granville's reply expressing the willingness of England to agree to a conference, provided Russia withdraw Gortschakoff's first note. Messengers were immediately sent to St. Petersburg and Versailles, to carry this reply.

Private advices from St. Petersburg, represent the anti-English feeling so strong that all English residents, find it necessary to retire themselves from public places.

Versailles, 29. The French yesterday attacked the German forces at Baum, between Montargis and Pithiviers, and were repulsed. Prince Frederick Charles was present, and directed the operation. A thousand prisoners fell into our hands.

Tours, 29. The Gazette de France says that Gen. Bourbaki, successfully engaged the Germans near Pithiviers.

Gen. Bourbaki has assumed command of the 10th army corps.

Citizens of France are not permitted to pass through Switzerland, to join the French armies.

English journals contradict the report published yesterday, that the French had been driven from Landon and Mezlers, and a French General had been captured. The French still hold the place, no fight has occurred.

Tours, 29. Gen. Keratry in a letter which is unprecedented in its style, unpatriotic, arrogant and egotistical, has given in his resignation in the face of the enemy. He threatens Gambetta with a council of war, and accuses Gen. Loyelda of treason. Keratry is mad.

London, Nov. 29. The Prussians have reappeared on the Paris & Strasbourg Railway to Chelles, 10m E. of Paris. They completed a new road, around the tunnel near Chelles, which had been destroyed by the French, and now their facilities for transporting reinforcements and supplies to the army besieging Paris are vastly increased.

The corporation of Trinity College, Dublin, have petitioned the British government to interfere and save the literary, art and scientific collection in Paris from destruction.

The latest Paris journals bear witness to the

of the people, who, they say, denounce the obstinacy of the Tours government.

Berlin, Nov. 29. Of the new Prussian loan, 50,000,000 thalers are to be issued in dollars and the remainder in louis.

Vienna, Nov. 29. It is reported here that recent declarations from St. Petersburg indicate that preparation be made by the European Powers for early action.

Brussels, Nov. 29. Belgium asks for the neutralization of Hunldrk.

It is said that the Empress of the French has been in this city since Monday.

Special to the World—

Tours, Nov. 29. The Duke of Mecklenburg

WAS FOILED IN HIS ATTEMPT

to occupy Lemans, which was covered by a corps of 50,000 men, composed of Fleracks and Keratry's troops, commanded by Gen. Fiereks.

The main body of De Paladines' army still occupy an entrenched position between Orleans and Athenay. The Germans attempted to drive him by pushing forward one force commanded Prince Frederick Charles and another to Blois, commanded by the Duke of Mecklenburg, while the centre, direct in front of Athnay, was commanded by Von Der Tann.

The government here has every assurance that Gen. de Paladines' strategy is advisable, and that at the proper moment he will assume the offensive, pierce Von Der Tann's flank and push towards Versailles, leaving a sufficient force of both wings to occupy the attention of Prince Frederick Charles and the Duke of Mecklenburg.

The right wing of the French army made six simultaneous attacks on the German left, yesterday, and were successful in five.

London, Nov. 28. The Tribune's correspondent at Vienna telegraphs this afternoon that the proposal of Russia for a conference on the Black Sea question was submitted to the Austrian Cabinet and accepted in principal, but the final agreement is made dependent upon certain preliminaries.

The correspondent at Versailles says that there was a demonstration against Besons last night from Mont Valerian and another against Montrauil this morning from the same place.

There was a serious attack upon the Prussian corps stationed at Clisse at 4 o'clock this morning, but the assaulting columns were repulsed. There were many killed and 250 prisoners taken. The loss on the German side was small. The Bavarian corps was engaged. A heavy fire was kept up by the French from Villejuif.

Special to N. Y. Tribune.

London, Nov. 29. Prussia's inaction, so much suspected at first, promises to be the key to the situation. Scarcely any doubt is now felt at the Foreign Office that the Conference will assemble. There is authority for saying that the English Government considers Prussia's intervention exceedingly useful. Prussia heard with regret and surprise of the Russian circular, the issue of which now at least was a surprise, and she concurs in the English views that if the powers enter in conference its action must be wholly unfettered. It is settled that a Conference if held, will meet at London, and it will surely be held. No doubt is felt of Russia's assent to the principle of a Conference.

The Tribune special correspondent at St. Petersburg, on Tuesday evening at 6 o'clock, telegraphs that Turkey has not yet consented to a conference, but probably will since actuated by a desire for peace, she objects not to the Russian's demands, and care not for the neutrality of the Black Sea. It is rumored that the Sultan has sent her an autograph letter on the subject.

PORTLAND

TO-DAY.

BY M. E. B.

On Hope, we'll hope!
And hasten not to-morrow;
Let all thy cares slid in sun,
The cares of old friends in shine,
The joys which bring thine.
Shall we wish them to-day,
Or leave them kind To-day?

Oh, hasten, dear To-day!
Oh hasten to-day!
For hopes and fears, sent hither,
And bore with sorrow fraught,
Fair hopes! we wish to night!
Take, take them all away,
And fling us not To-day!

O Infinite To-day!
That Shalt not pass away!
Out of the shadow, night,
Into thy heavenly light,
Under that waveless light,
We fain would hasten on to-day,
And call earth Yesterday.

[Lippincott's Magazine for December.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

It was not quite a year since Mr. George Hartfield, the leading solicitor in the market town of Norbury, had returned from his honeymoon tour, bringing with him the prettiest little wife that the good old town had boasted for a long time. George was thirty years of age, but his wife looked a mere girl, and was at least eleven years his junior; much to the disgust of more mature damsels, who would have been very willing to step into the proprietorship of the good-looking young lawyer and his prim, respectable old house, which was one of the most conspicuous dwellings in the upper and more rural part of the High-street. Mr. Hartfield had inherited an excellent business from his father, and was altogether a person of some importance in the opinion of the Norbury world at large, and of himself in particular.

The wife was a shy, girlish creature, who seemed scarcely fit to be the mistress of that big formal house, with its shining wainscotted walls and grim old furniture—furniture that had been fashionable in the days of George's grandfather—gloomy old mahogany four-posters and walnut-wood presses, in the polished panels whereof sentimental little Alice Hartfield, whose head was kind of branch station of the circulating library, used to fancy she saw ghosts in the gloaming. In honest truth, she did not take much to the house in the High-street, and looked back with fond regretfulness to the bright country home from which George had won her; but Mr. Hartfield being of an arbitrary temper, and convinced that the old house was perfection, she never ventured to hint her dislike. It must be owned that the evenings were long and dull for so girlish a matron. George Hartfield was often out—sometimes at a public dinner at the Crown Hotel, sometimes at a social club held at the same prosperous tavern, sometimes playing bulliards with bachelor clients—all in the way of business, of course, as he told his wife; but the evenings during which he was absent were not the less lonely on that account.

Mr. Hartfield employed three clerks; a gentlemanly young man, who was articled; a strapling, for copying and out-of-door work; and a gray-haired old man, with a face upon which there was a look of settled melancholy. Mr. Bestow, the articled clerk, and Thomas Dredger, the strapling, had christened him Old Dismal, and spoke of him commonly by that disrespectful subriquet. If he had ever heard the name, it happarently troubled him very little. He rarely spoke except to farm his business required him to speak; and in the two years that he had been with Mr. Hartfield he had not advanced by so much as one step toward intimacy with his fellow-workers. He lived three miles out of Norbury walking, to and from the office in all weathers, and no one had ever seen the inside of his home.

Her first year of married life closed in sorrow and disappointment for Alice Hartfield. The baby-stranger, from whose coming she had expected so much pleasure, only opened its eyes upon this world to close them again forever. She dwelt upon this loss with a grief which seemed to her husband just a little exaggerated, and it is possible that her tears and sad looks drove him to his club at the Crown rather more often this year than in the previous winter. It was not that he was unkind or indifferent to his pretty young wife. He fancied that she was perfectly happy with her books, work and piano in the interval between 9 o'clock and 11, at which hour he punctually returned to his abode, as sober as when he left home, well pleased with himself and the world at large.

The two younger clerks commented very freely upon the solicitor's conduct in his domestic capacity.

"If I had such a pretty wife, I wouldn't leave her alone evening after evening as our governor does," remarked the strapling pertly; "I wonder he isn't ashamed of himself."

"He ought to take her more into society, certainly," replied Mr. Bestow, the articled clerk, who was in much request in that brilliant circle which constituted Norbury "society."

Mr. Morgan, the old clerk looked up from his desk with a sigh.

"What, my funeral friend!" cried Bestow; "do you mean to say you are interested in the subject?"

"I am very much interested in Mrs. Hartfield," the old man answered quietly; "she is always kind to me. It is a good sign when a woman of her age takes the trouble to be polite to an old man like me—a sign that the heart's in the right place. I wish her husband understood her better; I don't think she wants to be taken to tea parties, Mr. Bestow; but I do think she wants a little more sympathy."

This was a long speech for Mr. Morgan.—The two younger men stared at him, saperciliously, and then went on with their work. From the first day of his coming to be mistress of the old house William Morgan had shown himself interested in his master's wife. He was always pleased to perform any little service for her, and seemed needlessly grateful for the smallest kindness at her hands.—His way home took him the whole length of the town; and Mrs. Hartfield used to intrust him with her books to change at the circulating library, an office which he performed with much taste and discretion.

"I take the liberty to carry a volume home with me for the night at odd times," he said to her one day.

"What Mr. Morgan, do you read novels?"

"No, madam but I have a niece living with me who is glad to skim the volumes of an evening."

"Indeed! You never spoke of her before. Is your niece married?"

"She—she is a widow, to all intents and purposes. Her husband deserted her three years ago, and left her and her child, a boy on my hands. But we are very happy together, I thank God!"

"The husband must have been a bad man."

"He was a most consummate scoundrel!" answered the old clerk, with suppressed intensity.

"How hard it must be for you to work for all three!" said Alice.

"It will be harder for the two that are left when I am gone. My niece is able to earn a little money at her needle, but very little. It is a dark lookout for the future."

One morning early in the Spring, Mr. Hartfield came into the office with a very dashing gentleman, a new client, who had just come into a handsome fortune by the death of old Squire Comberford of Comberford Hall, seven miles from Norbury. Edgar Comberford, the new proprietor, was a nephew of the old man and had been a school-fellow of George Hartfield's fifteen years before. Since that time he had disappeared from the ken of Norbury, and was supposed to have led a wild life in foreign lands. He was eminently handsome, and in high spirits at his accession to the Comberford Hall estate.

"There are the papers, title deeds, leases, and so on," said George Hartfield, pointing to a japanned box on a shelf in the office; "do you want to see them?"

"Not I George" answered Mr. Comberford gaily; "it is quite enough for me to know that the lands are free from mortgages, and that the rents come in briskly. The papers couldn't be in better hands. Hallo! what's that?"

It was Mr. Morgan, the old clerk, who had put his head in at the door of the office and suddenly withdrew it.

"Only one of my clerks", answered George Hartfield. "Come in Morgan!" he bawled; but the clerk did not reply, and the two young men left the office; Mr. Comberford to be introduced to his friend's wife.

He was not a little surprised by her grace and beauty, not a little fascinated by her shy girlish manners. He stayed to dinner, and contrived to make himself eminently agreeable to both his host and hostess, giving an animated account of his adventures in Mexico during the last two years.

"I should never have come home from there George, but for my uncle's death!" he said. "I was thoroughly cleaned out when I left England, and meant to live and die abroad."

After this social dinner, Mr. Comberford dropped in very often at his friends house. He seemed to have some perpetual reason for seeing the solicitor on business, and happened by a kind of fatality to call when the master of the house was out. Would he leave a statement of his business with a clerk? No, he would wait; and he strolled unannounced into the little sitting-room at the back of the offices where Mrs. Hartfield spent her mornings. It was the prettiest room in the house, opening into a small garden at the end of which there was a narrow creek—an inlet from the pretty river that flowed through Norbury. By and by Mr. Comberford took to approaching the house by this way. He was an expert waterman, and spent a good deal of his time on the river. So it was an easy and natural thing for him to moor his boat at the bottom of George Hartfield's garden, and step lightly on shore. He always found Alice in her sitting room, and he found a look in her face which told him his visits were not unwelcome. He was a thorough man of the world, and knew the danger of the game he was playing; nor did he yield without a struggle to that temptation that had overtaken him. Such a heart as he had was hit harder than it had been of late years. The outside world of Norbury had not yet been awakened to the scandal of Mr. Comberford's frequent visits to the lawyer's house, nor was the lawyer himself alarmed by them; but the younger clerks were quick to remark upon the length and frequency of those morning calls, and on George Hartfield's blindness to the fact.

Edgar Comberford had been settled at the Hall for six months, when George Hartfield had occasion to go to Paris on business. He had intended to take his wife with him for the trip, but the weather was sultry and oppressive, and he went alone. Mrs. Hartfield seemed very little disappointed by this change in his plans. Mrs Comberford had assured her that Paris was utterly unbearable in July.

It was upon his business that George Hartfield was engaged. He went to make a settlement with a Parisian money-lender who had advanced money to the young man in the days of his insolvency, and who now put in an exorbitant claim for interest.

The first day of Mr. Hartfield's absence went by without any visit from Mr. Comberford; but in the evening, when the clerks were gone and Alice was sitting alone and very low spirited, the peculiar sound of the boat grating against the woodwork at the bottom of the garden struck upon her ear, and brought a sudden blush into her cheeks. She looked up with a movement of surprise as Edgar Comberford came across the garden. He came in at the open window with the air of a person who had a perfect right to be there, and seated himself opposite to Alice at the little table where she was drinking tea.

"I thought you would give me a cup of tea after my row, Mrs. Hartfield," he said, "and could not pass the creek without begging for one. I dreaded going home to the desolation of the Hall—dreary, empty rooms and cross old housekeeper. I think I shall go back to Mexico before the year is out."

Alice gave a little start.

"What?" she said; "leave the Hall forever?"

"In all probability for ever. A man seldom comes home a second time from such a place as Mexico."

"But why should you go back there—why should you be tired of the Hall so soon?"

"Why should I be tired of life altogether? Why should I wish to run away from myself—from you?"

And then he went on to speak of his love for her, in dark hints rather than in plain words. She tried to reprove him, to show him that she was angry, but the attempt was a very feeble one. She could only insist that he should leave her immediately. He did leave her, but not immediately, and not till she had changed insistance into piteous entreaty.

The boat had scarcely shot away in the twilight when the door between the sitting room and the office opened and the old clerk, Morgan, appeared on the threshold.

"You here, Mr. Morgan?" exclaimed Alice, making a vain attempt to conceal her tears; "I thought all the clerks had gone."

"I had some letters to copy, Mrs. Hartfield. Can I do anything in town for you to-night?"

"Nothing, thank you".

He lingered, twisting the brim of his shabby old hat round and round in his thin wrinkled hands.

"I wish to Heaven I might speak to you freely," he said at last, "without offending or wounding you."

"About what?"

"About the man who has just left you."

"Mr. Comberford, my husband's friend?"

"Your husband's direct, dearest not—and yours," answered the old man passionately.

"What right have you to say that?" asked Alice, trembling with indignation.

"The right given me by knowledge of the world, and, above all, by my knowledge of Edgar Comberford."

"What knowledge can you have of Mr. Comberford? Did you ever see him before he came to this office?"

"Never, but his name is a word of dire meaning in my life. Ask him what became of the girl he stole away from an honorable home and left in a wretched London lodging, four years ago. Ask him the fate of Bessie Rayner."

"Why should I trouble myself about his affairs? And who is this Bessie Rayner?"

"Never mind who she is, Mrs. Hartfield. She was a good girl before he met her. She will never be a happy woman hereafter. Ask him about her if you doubt what I tell you, and you will see by his countenance whether he is innocent or guilty. Knowing what I do, I am bound to warn you of his real character."

"I do not require any such warning," replied Alice coldly; "Mr. Comberford is no more to me than any other client of my husband's. And I beg that you will not trouble yourself to dictate my conduct to him."

"I see that I have offended you."

"I don't like spies."

"I am no spy, Mrs. Hartfield. I am an old man, and have had bitter cause to know the wickedness of the world. Your sweet face has been a kind of light to me ever since your husband brought you home to this house. God forbid the light should ever be extinguished!"

He bowed and left her—left her standing in a reverie, looking absently out upon the shadowy field beyond the little garden and winding creek. She was unhappy, amazed, bewildered.

"I wish George had taken me to Paris," she thought. "He ought not to leave me alone in a dreary old house like this, to be insulted by a clerk."
